Description :

Présentation de l'auteur Corrina Park used to have big plans. Studying English literature in college, she imagined writing a successful novel and leading the idealized life of an author. But she's been working at the same advertising agency for the past five years and the only thing she's written is . . . copy. Corrina knows there must be more to life, but she faces the same question as does everyone in her generation: how to find it? Here is the brilliant debut graphic novel about a young woman's search for happiness and self-fulfillment in the big city. (With two-color illustrations throughout.) From the Hardcover edition. Revue de presse Shoplifter exists as a slice of life story. Where it stands above other works is in its execution and especially in Cho's terrific and illustrative artwork. His first graphic novel effort knocks it out of the park with its humor, sense of style, and near-flawless execution of its simple narrative. Examiner.com A funny and touching portrait of urban angst. What's exceptional is the eye-catching art in two colors, black and red. The adept use of black ink delineates but does not complete the outlines of people and buildings; the rose tones shadow and spotlight, subtly drawing attention. Large swatches of rose or black physically define Corinnas distance, both enforced and self-imposed, from her world. The delicate ink line articulates the facial expressions, and the intricate background and character details tie the narrative together. With its appealing story and quirky heroine, Chos debut is a visually electrifying, if minor, tale. Publishers WeeklyWhere has Michael Cho been hiding himself? . . . His art is lovely with an art deco, Darwyn Cooke-style approach to the page, detailed with shaded images and dense backgrounds that seem full of people and buildings that nearly seem to jump off his page. Theres a tremendous feeling of life and realism in Chos characters; in their small sideways glances and bright eyes, Cho captures the essence of humanity in even the most random of background strangers . . . A memorable tale.
